

As Ian Becomes a Hurricane Again, Here's How It Will Affect the Triangle and Central NC

Hurricane Ian is set to strike North Carolina on Friday and deluge the Triangle with 3 to 6 inches of rain over the weekend, possibly triggering flash floods and power outages from downed trees.

The storm will move in from the North Carolina coast and soak the state as it moves west, dropping more rain in the eastern sections.

The storm, downgraded during the day, became a hurricane again, the National Hurricane Center reported at 5 p.m. It will take "aim at the Carolinas and Georgia with life-threatening flooding, storm surge and strong winds."

Continue reading HERE

Source:

<https://www.newsobserver.com/news/weather/hurricane/article266553846.html#storylink=cpy>

[Disclaimer]