

‘Civilizational collapse’: Elon Musk sounds alarm on world government

‘I think we should be a little bit concerned’

Tesla founder and Twitter owner Elon Musk likes things big. Just look at his personally funded space program, car company and $44 billion purchase of the social-media site.

But he’s taken the opportunity of an appearance before the “World Government Summit” to warn against having, well, a world government.

“I know this is called the World Government Summit,” he said, However, “I think we should be a little bit concerned by actually becoming too much of a single world government.”

He continued, “We want to avoid creating a civilizational risk by having frankly, this may sound a little odd, too much cooperation between governments.”
