

Farmers protests in Europe bring France, Germany and Poland to standstill

The European Union is facing fresh chaos as farmers from member countries come together to block off major highways in a huge protest.

Angry French farmers have brought the nation to a standstill by blocking major roads with enormous convoys of tractors as they protest against what they see as excessive EU regulations and low wages.

Pictures from across France show roadblocks and street protests set up by agricultural workers who are up in arms as part of a rising tide of anger among agricultural producers across the European Union.

In a display of solidarity truck access has also been blocked to the port of Calais preventing the transportation of goods to the United Kingdom.

Farmers in Germany and Poland were also out protesting against the European Union. In Poland there are concerns about cheap imports from Ukraine flooding the market and about EU green policies.
