

‘Influence peddling schemes’: Biden family received millions in ‘incremental payments’ from foreign nationals, created multiple companies to conceal source of funds, says House Oversight Committee

The House Oversight and Accountability Committee released new evidence on Wednesday of the Biden family’s alleged “influence peddling schemes.”

House Oversight Committee Chairman James Comer (R-Ky.) revealed that “thousands of pages of financial records” obtained during the investigation show that the Biden family and their associates created a “complicated network of companies” in an attempt to conceal millions of dollars of payments from foreign businesses.

“The Bidens’ foreign entanglements are breathtaking and raise serious questions about why foreign actors targeted the Biden family, what they expected in return, and whether our national security is threatened. We will continue to pursue additional bank records to follow the money trail and inform legislative solutions to prevent this type of corruption. Americans deserve answers, transparency, and accountability,” Comer said.
