Chairman and CEO Jim Murren called the closures being made for “the good of our employees, guests, and communities.”

“The people of MGM Resorts have worked to try to find a way to continue delivering high-quality hospitality and entertainment experiences for our guests while keeping our employees doing the jobs they love in a safe environment,” said Murren.

MGM Resorts said it will reopen resorts as soon as it is safe to do so and they will continue to support employees, guests and communities in “every way we can during this period of closure.”

Reservations for arrival prior to May 1 will not be taken at the moment but said to monitor MGMResorts.com for changes.

Details on closing procedures and timelines were forthcoming, the resort operator said.
