Andrzej Duda says there is no evidence to suggest missile that landed in his country was launched by Russia

Poland's president, Andrzej Duda, has said there is no evidence to suggest a missile that landed in his country on Tuesday evening, killing two people, was an intentional attack or was launched by Russia.

"Most likely, it was a Russian-made S-300 rocket," Duda said on Wednesday. But he said there were "many indications" that the missile was fired as part of Ukraine's air defences and "unfortunately fell on Polish territory".

Nato's secretary general confirmed that while an investigation was continuing, initial analysis suggested the incident was "likely caused by a Ukrainian air defence missile fired to defend Ukrainian territory" against Russian cruise missile attacks.
