

Queen Elizabeth II under medical supervision in Scotland due to ‘concern for her health’

THE Queen’s health concerns have reignited after Prince Charles is reportedly visiting his mother daily.

Sept. 8 (UPI) — Britain’s royal family said that Queen Elizabeth II was under medical supervision at her Balmoral castle in Scotland on Thursday because her doctors were concerned about her health.

The 96-year-old queen has been at the Balmoral estate for weeks and participated in the changeover from Prime Minister Boris Johnson to Liz Truss on Tuesday.

“Following further evaluation this morning, The queen’s doctors are concerned for Her Majesty’s health and have recommended she remain under medical supervision. The queen remains comfortable and at Balmoral,” Buckingham Palace said in a statement.

Prince Charles, who is first in line to ascend to the British throne, and his wife Camilla have gone to visit the queen at the castle, royal officials said. Prince William and his wife Kate Middleton and Prince Harry and wife Meghan Markle also headed for Balmoral after receiving news of the queen’s condition.
