

Supreme Court of India refuses to legalize same-sex marriage

Supreme Court of India says legalization of same-sex marriage would need to come through the Parliament

India's highest court refuses to legalize same-sex marriage, claiming it is not their responsibility.

The Supreme Court of India declined to pass a ruling on the issue, arguing that it was beyond their scope and needed to be taken to Parliament.

"This court can't make law. It can only interpret it and give effect to it," Chief Justice Dhananjaya Chandrachud said.

Same-sex marriage remains a contentious issue in Indian politics, where conservative social norms clash with international progressive movements.
