

Turkey Detains Six Suspected Of Spying On Uyghurs

Turkey's intelligence agency has detained six people suspected of spying on ethnic Uyghurs who have fled persecution in China, state media reports said Tuesday.

A seventh person was wanted but remained at large, the reports said, without specifying the suspects' nationalities.

The seven are accused of collecting information on Turkey's Uyghur associations and tracking prominent members of its community, and reporting it to Beijing.

Turkey's Uyghur community — estimated in the tens of thousands — is one of the largest outside China.
