

Vaughan condo shooting: Gunman who shot dead five in Canada was 73

A day after a man shot five dead in a Toronto apartment complex, police are releasing some details about the suspect.

But the answer to the most pressing question has not been disclosed: what would prompt a 73-year-old to go from apartment to apartment and shoot residents.

The alleged gunman, a resident in the building, was shot and killed by police at the scene.

The victims have not been identified.

York Region police first responded to reports of a shooting at an apartment building in Vaughan, about 30km (19 miles) north of Toronto, at 19:20 (12:20 GMT) on Sunday.

Police chief Jim MacSween said officers found a “horrendous scene” when they arrived, with numerous deceased victims found in different apartments of the building.
