Weekly Update

Greetings from Tyler,

It was almost the perfect legal defense. The CDC has made a big deal of coming out, in the person of Ms. Walenski, and said they didn't perform up to standards and there's a shake-up in progress. That ought to do it. So, of the lawsuits filed and pending, the CDC has just inoculated themselves. Mistakes were made, but every effort is being made to piece together some kindergarten talk. Here and there we find that masks are still being required of school children, and military pilots are banned from training if they refused the "vaccine." Who ever heard of a vaccine that would see the recipient come down, maybe twice, with the malady in question? There are high profile people, like the pretender and his wife who've been double vaccinated, double boosted and have had to isolate. It's not nearly as bad as it might have been! Beam me up.

How's the Ukrainian war going? Yes it's still going, and there's every conceivable prediction as to the conclusion. Right now concerns are focused on a nuclear power plant that the Russians reportedly occupied last February, and have kept running by forcing Ukrainian workers to keep working. Word is that Russia might reroute the power produced to it's own grid. Does that mean that the Russians didn't go after solar panels and wind turbines? Wonder why not.

TV clips are showing Europe's rivers dried up. Did this happen overnight? How did these rivers go from transportation hubs to completely dry? You can bet we'll be told it's man-made climate change. Maybe you didn't buy an electric car soon enough? Officials have already decided that rain is not a solution to the problem. No, it's undoubtedly a climate crisis. And it's all your fault!

You might have thought we were through with Covid-19. Not so fast! Even though the CDC made a huge deal this week about how they'd mishandled the recommendations and were undergoing a huge shake-up, Covid muscles are still being flexed. So, no matter how cockamamie the rules may have been, they're still in effect out there and damaging lives. Those questioning the orthodoxy are still being banned from social networks (hello facebook and Instagram). Just today RFK Jr.'s organization got banned for something deemed misinformation.

When the British tried this back in the 1700's, it didn't go over so well. But you'd think the wars were never fought and freedom never established. The "elite" are using technology to fling people into utter darkness if they depart from the established narrative. Regardless of how many "followers," you can't say something that disputes the party line without getting in trouble, meaning banned from distribution.

It seems every time you turn on the news, you see a drone shot of Mar-a-Lago with police lights reflecting off the walls. Whatever happened to the 4th Amendment? We'll probably never see the underlying pretense for this reckless action on the part of national "law enforcement." There's all kinds of speculation as to what they may have been after. All the trial balloons have gone down in flames. Nuclear secrets, anybody? Some think that Trump had the goods on agency misbehavior and planned to embarrass the haughty agency in due time.

But the agents had been in Mar-a-Lago only a matter of weeks before, and everything seemed to be proceeding fine. There's a letter from the National Archives thanking Trump for his cooperation. Agents could look EVERYWHERE and take anything. Even Melania's wardrobe was fair game. Some legal experts expect that Trump will be charged with a crime, and that ought to show us wretched right-wingers how things work.

Not that the U. S. doesn't deserve whatever comes. We were endowed with certain faculties that were supposed to help us discern. But you can't depend on your own discernment any more. We'll be told what to think, what shots to get, and there better be no backtalk, or else.

It's starting to look downright totalitarian. Some have called the raid, The Day America Changed. We hope not. Some of us are hoping God will give America another chance. We've definitely been blowing it, government wise, culture wise etc. Sooner or later it will all work out. It's our responsibility to WATCH and warn.

Mark
