

Weekly Update by Mark Armstrong

- 17 June 2022

Greetings from Tyler,

Everything is going according to plan. We're up to our ears in crises, the phony administration is saving the planet, but only in the U. S. It would be fine if Saudi Arabia and Venezuela could ramp up the supply of oil. But we're not going to do it here. Because we've gone "green." No need to explain that it's still the same earth, and nobody produces cleaner energy than the United States. But they've decided we're dense, and they're going to pound their point through our thick heads when we buy gas. If there's any consolation, it is that the global warming zealots have to buy gas and groceries too.

So the pretender sent a strongly worded letter to those greedy oil outfits. He must have said "Putin's price hike" or words to that effect four or five times. You mean the guys at the apex of the oil industry need the pretender to tell them why prices have necessarily skyrocketed? It's no secret. It's the price of going green. "Look in my eyes," the pretender said before he said he would "end" fossil fuels. We've got to destroy the western way of life to save the planet. Nonsense.

The Major League Baseball franchises are being pressed to wear rainbow stars on their uniforms. If not, some gal on ESPN will call players who refuse bigots and haters. The media insists that support of gay marriage and transgenders is so universally supported that none dare oppose it. Maybe that's because there will be network and internet media attacks that will swing into action and call the non-supporter a bigot. That sounds like a reason somebody might keep their head down.

They sing God Bless America in the seventh inning at major league games. Talk about a conflict! All while wearing the rainbow star, everybody but those hateful bigots who refuse it. None of this makes any sense. Did you ever consider that we're being made to endure nonsense because the consequences are too disturbing? Not for one minute do I accept that a majority is supportive of homosexuality. The majority just doesn't want to suffer the consequences of being called a hater and a bigot. Asking God to bless America when there is apparent embracing of things He condemns roundly in both Testaments is insane.

Do we really all support this concept that someone can change genders on a whim? Little children are being offered the “choice” as to whether they would prefer to go through life as a boy or girl. They get to decide. Little children who still believe in the Easter bunny and Santa Clause are being “educated” to choices they didn’t realize were an option. Parents who believe in God and nature? They’re just old fashioned and out of touch with the latest science. You see, there are puberty blockers that will prevent under- age kids from developing naturally. We can only guess at the side effects. There will be comprehensive studies out in about fifteen years. The Heritage Foundation just released a study showing that tranny children are more likely to kill themselves, sooner or later. That sounds like a side-effect.

What did they think would happen when they confuse little children about their very identity? It doesn’t end well. How many trans are recognizable? I can think of two, and neither is what you’d call a roll model. There’s a reason they don’t show us what a wonderful life they’re living. If they could, they would. So you get the “drag-queen” shows, where guys in outrageous wigs, make-up and high heels mince around like they’re having fun.

We don’t want to get political, but we have a pretender who thinks we deserve wild gas prices. We’re getting what we’ve got coming. The pretender gets pretty miffed if he thinks he’s taking the blame for something. He’s liable to lash out angrily. It’s all Trump’s fault after all. Him and his ultra-maga supporters. And Putin, don’t forget him, and those greedy oil companies.

The dog and pony show known as the January 6, committee is failing. Everything else they’ve done to rid the playing field of Donald Trump also failed. With any sanity, the J 6 committee will go the way of the Muller investigation, or the impeachment debacle.

The energy secretary says the prices at the pump make a compelling case for buying an electric car. Don’t ask where the components come from. It’s not pretty. Don’t ask too much about charging the batteries, or what happens when they’ve breathed their last. But it will only cost you half as much to drive. If you’re not going to far. Concerns about the grid are on the news. How does a blackout effect a car’s charger? There’s not a word about any of it in the commercials. But it would have to be a second or third car, not one that you rely on for hassle-free transportation.

I have to credit my son with this. He says, "They should have gone green when gas was cheap." They were preaching it, now we're living it. It's as bogus as it was twenty years ago. But we're apparently paying for the companies and corporations suddenly preaching woke doctrine as if it's universally accepted. Our retirement accounts are tied up with a basket of companies we know little about. Maybe you've noticed, the markets have not been kind of late. Everybody's taking a bath, and why?

Just seeing photos of monkey-pox is enough to give you nightmares. If you knew what they had to do to get the disease, you wouldn't sleep at all. It seems like a return to aids, when the news told us it was an epidemic. Nothing works like making people worry. It seems everything we learn is designed to make us worry. But monkey-pox is not airborne. We aren't going to get it. Or a vaccine either.

Mark

Source: <http://www.intercontinentalcog.org/fridayupdates.php>

[Disclaimer]