

Weekly Update by Mark Armstrong - 18 February 2022

Greetings from Tyler,

We're placed on edge by the minute. There's about to be a WAR! Putin has determined to invade Ukraine last Wednesday and the U. S. is talking mighty tough. There will be sanctions like they've never seen. We'll bulk up military readiness in the surrounding NATO countries and send more ammo to the Ukrainians. Most of all we'll think of nothing else. Especially not that little criminal court filing that confirms spying against the former President.

That's just a distraction, we're told. The REAL problem is...

There's a war of information going on at a very critical time in world events. Everybody demands the final say on what is and isn't true. The government and the media are speaking with one voice, no matter what the subject. Many of us have seen what they've been saying and doing for several years now, and have lost trust, if not interest.

Now there's one incident after another of shelling in Eastern Ukraine, with the culprit in dispute. Maybe there will be some battles, if not a war, after all. Or maybe Vladimir has a point. He doesn't want missiles within no more than several minutes from the Russian Capitol. Think Cuban missile crisis. The media says little if anything about it.

Special Prosecutor Durham has made criminal court indictments against Clinton campaign lawyers which confirm hacking, spying and possibly the planting of false evidence in order to get a big investigation started, which took hold of nearly every three letter agency and led to "serious concerns" on the part of every media outlet. Crooked says it's a "distraction."

Let's get visceral about the mandates and the lock downs and demand the government "do more" to make sure there is universal compliance. Just as the illness burns itself out, we have to come down on one side or the other of government authority.

It's probably wrong of us to notice, but have you ever seen so many fall over unconscious while expressing how great they feel about complying? Somebody somewhere has to have a sense of humor. When you see a stand-up funny lady bragging about how many times she's been vaxed and boosted, and then say, "Jesus loves me more than anybody else," just before banging her head on the floor and being rushed to the hospital, now that's FUNNY! But it's not the only example. I don't know when we've seen so many sports competitors collapse on the field, news people keel over, sometimes while advocating for more stringent mandates. It's just a coincidence, mind you.

We've watched in disbelief the woke dictator of Canada get tough on naysayers. It's not going over very well. He's invoked emergency powers, and expects the police and the banks to play along, and they just might. But is this really about the virus anymore? There will be no defiance! The government will destroy you!

Meanwhile, there's been a destructive attack against a Canadian pipeline that wrecked trucks and buildings. Haven't heard? Figures.

But here's where the rubber meets the road. A lady in Finland, a religious teacher, apparently asked whether it was a good idea for the government to be involved in a "gay pride" parade. She included some Bible verses in her e-mail. Now she faces up to two years in prison, because the verses she quoted are regarded as "hate speech" in Finland. Notice, the verses she quoted are not being included in any of the reporting. There's a reason for that, and it's surprising that they want to bring this thing to a head. But now it's on. The Word of God strongly condemns homosexuality, both in the New Testament and the Old. Political correctness wasn't being practiced at the time of writing, and it's highly likely that many will find the Biblical language unsettling, to say the least.

We don't know which verse it might have been, but none are mistakable. They are blatant. The government in Finland regards it as "hate speech." That's where we are. The Word of God is hate-speech. This case will reverberate around the world. From what we've seen mainstream Christianity will probably agree, to their everlasting shame.

Mark

Source: <http://www.intercontinentalcog.org/fridayupdates.php>

[Disclaimer]