

Weekly Update by Mark Armstrong

- 29 April 2022

Greeting from Tyler,

The limits are being tested, and some of us have reached ours long since. How much will the public stand for? It seems most big concerns that advertise on television, including some very unlikely ones, are pushing former societal boundaries. Lately we've seen our faces rubbed in every controversial subject, as if it's "settled science." Are we going to continue using their services, buying their products, keeping these companies on top despite the fact that they make fun of everything we stand for? "Oh that's just politics." Not any more it's not.

A strategy is in motion, and most (unless the media are lying) are buying, hook line and sinker. Crisis is the method being used to bring about world government. People are being frightened into mindless obedience, and feeling superior for their trouble. The video from Melbourne during the pandemic was something to see. Who could have imagined the lockdown being enforced brutally in a free country? If the clashes were shot in black and white, you'd think it came from the heart of Europe in the 1930's. But it's current, and a permanent blight.

Japan's economic crisis is starting to show itself. The one asset they own is U. S. Treasury securities. Who's going to bail them out? Problem is, the Fed has been buying our own Treasury Securities. So...

Is the land full of bloody crimes? For some reason it's not nice to hold criminals in jail. What are you? Heartless? Better that they're on the street, committing more crimes. That's what is happening in Los Angeles and New York among other big cities. But never mind the big cities, the philosophy driving much of the crime is being preached nationwide around the clock. The networks are on it.

It's interesting watching the testimony of the head of Homeland Security. They should have multiple angles on the border on a big screen during the session. We're having to watch it. Don't worry, everything is under control. They've figured out a way to process the flood heading our way, due to increased efficiency. But the national scuttlebutt is that he doesn't like the situation. Wait

'till the Easter Bunny finds out!

Poor Mr. Biden. They're treating him like an Alzheimer's patient in public. We're exposed to brief snippets of confusion, then they assure us everything is fine. It's getting worse. He's going to outlaw incandescent light bulbs, again? Better stock up. With any luck, it will be overturned again. Saving the planet much? His entourage is all up in arms about the purchase of twitter by Elon Musk. One minute you're the darling of the left, saving the planet, taking humans to Mars, and the next is that he plans to allow freedom of speech on twitter! The long knives are out, and apparently legislation will have to be passed, or a minister of dis-information appointed. Otherwise, who knows what kind of hate speech will offend the weirdos.

Will it ever be our turn to be offended? The blue (or is it green) haired nose-rings make the most outrageous accusations against anyone who would dare to quote God's Word. The New York Times published a shameful op-ed accusing God of being racist, violent, and anti-gay. You won't find it quoted here. We don't reprint blasphemy, and this dude better keep his eye on the sky, not that it will help. But it seems that people who follow God just have to take it on the chin while "society" is busy being righteous. Modern views are skewed beyond recognition. How far we've come!

It's being argued that Elon Musk has no idea what he's in for. Does he understand the vehemence that will be aimed at him? There is a meltdown underway. The analysts simply can't imagine an environment where they can't ban and de-platform anyone not singing from the approved hymnal. It's an outrage. We can only hope. It's going to be difficult for Elon to decide what to allow, because you know the limits will be tested by saboteurs right off the bat. Then the media with hair on fire will declare that freedom just can't be allowed. It's too dangerous to the feelings of those who are staunchly bought in to things that just aren't true. Like gender is a state of mind. Or the "planet" needs people to save us from global warming. They've decided to force the issue.

Right away the response was to appoint a truth czar. Surely it won't pass Constitutional muster, but legal matters take time. People will be tagged by the new truth ministry. They've appointed some woman who's on the record being wrong on important issues. Should be fun. But that's only the first salvo. The enlightened crowd is going to control what everybody thinks and says or know the reason why. With any luck, they'll find out the reason why.

A famous quote from Ronald Reagan was something to the effect that it wasn't that the opposition didn't know much, it was just that they knew so much that wasn't true. Do they ever! What if he could see what we're seeing. He'd shake his head in disgust. I'd hate to think what my Dad would say if he saw what we're up against. Watching the news is like taking a beating.

Mark

Source: <http://www.intercontinentalcog.org/fridayupdates.php>

[Disclaimer]