Weekly Update

Greetings from Tyler,

Not a news break goes by without mention of the Covid plague. Dr. Fauci is on TV again, warning that people should wear masks in public settings. Los Angeles decided against another mask mandate, but not before letting everyone know that they had the power to impose a requirement. Several cities had already announced that they wouldn't be enforcing any masking rules. You'd think police had something more important to do, especially in California. Apparently we've been too stupid to live our lives all this time. What would we do if we didn't have some bureaucrat telling us what to do? It looks like they're not going to let Covid die a natural death, and why should they? Never has such intrusive power been wielded over a panicked public.

The damage that's been done to the U. S. economy via lock-downs and mandates is incomprehensible. Money was created and given to people who don't want to go to work. The frauds we've heard about are mind-boggling. It seems the government always sends the money and asks questions later. Well this was an opportunity for rampant fraud. Now we've got rampant inflation, which is surely not the fault of the people running this disaster.

When Trump spoke about the trouble with Western Europe, Germany in particular, being at the mercy of the Russian pipeline the German delegation laughed at him. In Hanover, Germany they've shut off hot water to all public buildings and turned off the lights at night. They're not laughing anymore, their constituency is taking cold showers. Wait until the weather gets cold.

Here at home we're busy learning the new definitions of words. Recession? Never mind the old definition, we're transforming the economy to sustainable energy and these hiccups are inevitable. That's what they're telling us. Interest rates have been raised this week in another attempt to tame inflation not seen since the Carter years. Never mind, they're saving the planet! It's not their fault, they expected the "transition" to be a little bumpy.

So we're transitioning to "clean energy." What a boondoggle! Who promoted these goofballs to be guardians of the planet? They've long since stopped trying to convince us that it's a worthy cause. Now we just have to do what we're told. It's the weather patterns, it's the fertilizer, it's the fact that you're using too much power. The buffoons pushing this nonsense appear to be doing it so they can preen in newfound power and self-righteousness. They've staked out the lofty offices of planetary protectors. They're also involved in meatless meat and other investments that they'll recoup just as soon as we acknowledge their brilliance. They can wait forever so far as we care.

Sri Lanka went green, now there's anarchy. The leaders have flown to parts unknown, and just in time. It's a mess, but it always is when this green stupidity is "mandated" over the population. Farms shut down over nitrogen fertilizer. Who knew that was what was destroying the planet? While everything is a shambles, at least they can bask in the knowledge that they went "green."

There are global organizations establishing these policies. Whether it's health or saving the planet, the WHO and the WEF have all the answers. To follow their logic is national suicide, but they're not fussed. They plan to be around, directing the rest of us amid the disaster they're promoting.

Maybe you've noticed, we don't predict the time of the "end of the world." But we are well aware of the events that lead up to the nightmares of the end time. It involves nations going along with central European powers as if they've got all the answers. Just do what they say, and you'll be fine. But we're not going to do what they say, we're going to talk back and disobey their mandates.

We're finding out that leaders of governments and important offices of nations around the world are graduates of the World Economic Forum, and they're all bought in to all this nonsense. It just has to be mandated throughout the nations and let the chips fall. Everything we believe about the Bible and the U. S. Constitution tells us these guys can go jump in the lake. It looks like they'll find out the hard way, but we're not going with them.

Mark
