Greetings from Tyler,

So they caught the guy responsible for publicizing highly classified documents. Everyone's concerned that this young (21 yr. old) guy would have access to such ruinous documents But they got him. The news media is all over it. They want to know what they can do to help see that government secrets remain secret! Never mind that the release reveals we've been, uh, misled by the spokespeople of various departments and agencies. We are apparently deeper into the Ukraine war than we were given to understand. They're talking about the agencies and spokesmen being "embarrassed." We're worried that government officials may be embarrassed?

It seems we may have more to worry about than the embarrassment of government officials. The news is so gruesome as it is, and we knew these buffoons weren't to be trusted. We've been lied to so routinely that we no longer trust official statements anyway. But the news agencies aren't worried about what the documents revealed, they're wondering instead how they can help make sure this doesn't happen again.

The Catholics are all torn up about crying statues again. This isn't the first time, by a long shot, that statues have been caught crying blood. But now the Vatican is going to send out scientists to verify what's going on. Like we care. They ought to be sending out plumbers.

Everybody who's visited the Middle East is familiar with the call the Muslim prayer, blared over outdoor loud speakers to your hurting ears. Now it's big news that you only need to go to Minneapolis to hear the phenomenon. Assuming you want to. Obama called it the sweetest sound he ever heard, or words to that effect.

The pretender has been visiting Ireland, exploring his roots, or whatever. It's almost more that we can stand, seeing that vacant look in his eyes while being directed which way to go. Hunter is now much in evidence, to the point that we suspect that there must be some motivating factor.

When has the United States projected such weakness? We see our former allies seemingly betting on China. Even Macron went to kiss the ring. Nations that weren't particularly friendly are making deals with the presumptive leading superpower, and it's not the U. S. anymore. It's hard to remember a time when everything internationally went against us. Jimmy Carter comes to mind, but he wasn't even in the same league.

Bud Light has a tranny on the can, and they can't figure out why their beer isn't selling. Must be us bigots. We just don't understand! Hopefully the board of directors realizes that they're running a business. You don't just insult your core audience and expect to thrive. But that's not the only corporation that's decided we need a push. Cruise lines, rental properties, prescription drugs... The television has become an instrument of indoctrination and you can hardly escape it. Big corporations have decided that they're going with the clap trap, and we'll either be drug along or they'll call us the names they've made up. We're getting used to it.

You wonder what HWA would say, thirty seven years later. He wouldn't believe how far society has fallen. We've got every aberrant intellectual explaining, in kindergarten terms, why all this is good. My Dad would be denouncing our society in the most glaring terms. That's just exactly what we intend to do. Somebody has to stand up and say, "NO!". Nobody else dares for fear of being canceled. We will continue to slaughter their sacred cows.
