

Weekly Update by Mark Armstrong

- February 10, 2023

Greetings from Tyler,

They must have thought it was the end of the world when buildings collapsed by the hundreds. The death toll is somewhere north of 20,000 and rising. Every time they find someone alive in the rubble it's a great victory. Many are still buried, some may be alive. The fear is that tens of thousands are still buried in rubble. The aerial shots are heartbreaking. Those multi-story buildings are not constructed according to the standards with which we're familiar. When an earthquake strikes, they fall down.

Several controversies are brewing, some with global repercussions. It seems that a journalist of some repute claims that the pretender blew up the Nordstream pipeline. If so, it sounds like an act of war. The list of nations that could have pulled off this deep sea caper isn't very long. Not only that, there were war games in the Baltic which would have provided the opportunity for any number of allies to have done it. But there's a problem.

The pretender made the mistake of saying, some time before the war started, that if Putin attacked Ukraine that he would "end" the pipeline. When questioned further he said, "I promise you, we'll be able to do it." Didn't the blown pipeline harm Europe? It definitely put a crimp in expected income to Russia. Award winning journalist Seymour Hersh has published a report, with only one source, who claims the pipeline explosion was an American plot. He's not believed by the mainstream press, and has a history of pursuing stories that they'd rather not hear.

After the Chinese spy balloon lingered over middle America for nearly a week, it doesn't fit the pretender's posture that he'd blow up the pipeline. The news claims military divers found the "payload" of the balloon virtually intact. That was in an afternoon news break on ABC radio, with no details. Now another balloon flying at 40,000 feet (airliner territory) has been shot down over Alaska, This one was much smaller, and you just have to wonder.

Almost immediately after classified documents were found at the Biden beach house, suddenly Mike Pence reported he had some too. Now his home has been raided. Never have I seen a man who thinks more highly of himself, and wears it like a cloak. It looks like an attempt to bury the Biden story. After all, these guys don't pack their own boxes. It bears mentioning that neither Biden (before he was the pretender) nor Pence had any excuse for possessing classified papers. It's almost as if the Pence escapade is meant to distract from the pretender's problem, or create the illusion that everybody does it. Now Pence has been sent a subpoena by the new special counsel investigating Trump. We'll know what Pence said in a couple of years. Probably when Trump's President and Pence isn't.

Information is coming at a pace where you can hardly keep up, and who knows what is or isn't true? We still give thanks to the One who created the earth in all its beauty and us too. These guys with weird hairdos and ear-lobe expanders get all wild-eyed about alien technology while researching the old pyramids and obelisks. If you want to see alien technology, of Divine design, check out the human hand.

Mark

[Disclaimer]