

Weekly Update by Mark Armstrong - January 13, 2023

Greetings from Tyler,

It's starting to look as though the pretender is reaching the end of his usefulness, as far as his handlers are concerned. Certainly all the brave talk about the next election goes hollow. Maybe I don't know the whole story, but the news is making it sound like his own lawyers and aides ratted him out. Does your lawyer have access to your garage? Lawyers are paid handsomely to protect their clients, aren't they?

To say the troubles are mounting would be a vast understatement. The pretense may be just about over. Who'd have thought the world could come unglued over such a short period of time? The industrial military complex used to be a topic of conversation. The phrase dare not be used when the aforementioned is blowing up all the old inventory half a world away, and no doubt in overdrive producing the latest models. But never mind that.

Familiar lunatics are all but foaming at the mouth. They're outraged that investigations are about to take place in official settings. It's sabotage, "TREASON," to hear them tell it. We can only hope their angst is justified. Sure enough, some of the most vocal opposition is about to occupy the top spots on committees and no doubt difficult questions will be asked. When you think about it, the easiest way out might be an admission of mishandling top secret papers and retiring with the millions. It wouldn't be hard for him to declare himself incompetent. It's not like there's a shortage of evidence. Otherwise, it's going to be excruciating for all concerned. The embarrassment will know no bounds.

Meanwhile the "elite" planet-saving brigade is meeting again at Davos. They're figuring out how to force all the big corporations, who've already officially bought into all the "woke" jargon, to abide by their European rules. You see, having the money and influence to operate in such rarefied company entitles you to membership in the club that plans to rule the world. It seems they plan to "make" every large corporation play along, or they won't be able to operate under the new European rules. Adopting the lingo is something these companies and corporations have already done. They're diverse, nonjudgmental, gay, green and saving the planet. What's the problem?

After all, they're only adopting the "modern" approach to everything. They better see what's going wrong, and stand up if it's not too late. These people who want to "save" us from ourselves aren't going to get a clue. This is their path to world rulership, for our own good of course. Nothing is off limits.

A trial balloon got floated this week. You must have heard about the fracas that broke out over gas stoves. It didn't go over so well despite the testimony of AOC. It's going to be hard work, distracting the public from the scandals coming from all directions. Already a special council? We no sooner heard of the latest scandal than a special council had been appointed. Usually that means that nobody dares say a word until...the special council releases a report. Until then, everybody hold their horses. Maybe they'll make a determination in two years' time.

At first it looked as though the mainstream was turning on Biden. Who hires aides to dig up trouble? With aides like that... But it looks like most of the mainstream wants us to look the other way. Maybe all this trouble will be eclipsed by world events. What could go wrong?

Whatever happens with the pretender, we can only hope these buffoons who've flown their private jets to the ski resort in Switzerland have a nice day, and leave the rest of us alone.
