

Weekly Update by Mark Armstrong

- September 15, 2023

Greetings from Tyler,

We wish we didn't, but we live in historic times. Look at who's leading this nation at a time when our enemies are consolidating and our presumptive president needs sleep. It's starting to feel like the worm is turning. The gaffs, the mumbling, the pratfalls, and now something really important. There's something we haven't been told.

The usual suspects are out in force, doing interviews and telling us that the impeachment inquiry is nothing but a conspiracy theory with no facts to back it up. Those three or four pesky loudmouths are playing rough with no evidence, they claim. But things are falling apart on every front.

Can you stand to see what's going on at the border? It's a stomach turning exercise, particularly after the play by play manhunt that went on this week ending in the capture of an illegal, wanted for murder in Brazil, convicted of murdering his girlfriend gruesomely. He was just another sad sack who'd made his way to the land of opportunity. How much did the manhunt cost? How much is the incursion at the border costing? What on earth is going on?

At no time in human history has anything like this taken place. The details are too idiotic to go into. Our national debt is admittedly out of hand, and we act like the well will never go dry. The truth of many untenable situations is obvious to anyone paying attention, but the networks tell us otherwise.

That may be about to change, insurance policy for the ages or not.

We're having electric cars waved in front of our faces day and night. Why? Has a panel discussion taken place somewhere that convinces us that electric cars are the future? The news today is that auto workers are on strike at several factories. They're worried that electric cars will be built in such a way that they're no longer needed. They also want a big raise. Where does the power that charges electric vehicles come from?

Do you remember the news worrying whether the power grid would hold up during inclement weather? Maybe the demands are greater, but we never worried that there wouldn't be sufficient wind to generate what we needed. Texas is on board with saving the planet. Well, we've got windmills anyway, the life expectancy and power generated is a taboo subject. Things are being done on the basis of feelings rather than brass tacks. You'd think this would all be explained logically, but that's not the case when it comes to saving the planet. China and India think it's nuts.

Word has it that we're about to be legally bound by W.H.O. regulations.

They've got to convict Donald Trump of something! Otherwise the destruction might be turned around, and no self-respecting liberal can stand for that. How dare we love the United States? We hate seeing what is being done, and even worse, why. The idea of the nation being saved, being turned back to the traditions we were founded upon, is reprehensible to the "new" values that we're being spoon-fed on a daily basis.

The values this nation was founded upon were enduring. These buffoons have tried everything and they're almost there! If they could just stamp out those of us who remember that God's blessings are beyond anything these do-gooders can come up with. We'd like to preserve them. The Feast of Trumpets falls tomorrow, and pictures the return of Jesus Christ to this earth. We celebrate it every year as the Bible dictates. Some things we're never going to stop doing, no matter what.

Mark