

White House unveils its plan to crack down on AI, US VP Kamala Harris to lead task force

The White House has outlined its strategy to tighten down on the AI race, amid mounting fears that technology may disrupt society as we know it. The Biden Administration described the technology as 'one of the most powerful' of our time, but said, "But in order to exploit the benefits it brings, we must first limit its hazards."

The goal is to establish 25 research institutions around the United States in order to obtain assurances from four businesses, including Google, Microsoft, and ChatGPT's founder OpenAI, that they will 'participate in a public review.'

Many of the world's brightest minds have warned about the dangers of AI, specifically that it could destroy humanity if a risk assessment is not conducted immediately. Elon Musk and other tech titans are concerned that AI may soon outperform human intellect and think for itself.

This implies it would no longer require or listen to humans, giving it the ability to steal nuclear codes, cause pandemics, and trigger world conflicts.

Vice President Kamala Harris, who has the lowest popularity rating of any VP, will oversee the containment effort as 'AI czar' with a $140 million budget. In comparison, the Space Force has a $30 billion budget.
