With the number of suicides among police on the rise, Paris authorities are investigating yellow vest protesters who encouraged officers to kill themselves.

The largely peaceful demonstrations of the past five months - which demand more help for France's beleaguered workers, retirees and students - have been noticeably infringed with radical protesters clashing with police.

On Saturday, protesters in the French capital were heard shouting 'Kill yourselves!' at police officers.

Police unions denounced the protesters' call as an unacceptable insult to the officers who have killed themselves and their suffering families.

France's interior minister Christophe Castaner called it a 'disgrace' and pledged his support for police and their loved ones, who have been under extra strain as the yellow vest protests have sometimes turned violent.

those who might be prosecuted for 'group offence toward a person exercising public authority'.

Police scuffle with protestors during a yellow vest demonstration in Paris, Saturday, April 20, 2019. French yellow vest protestors are marching anew to remind the government that rebuilding the fire-ravaged Notre Dame Cathedral isn't the only problem the nation needs to solve.

Police unions held silent protests on Friday after two officers killed themselves last week.

Unions say police ranks have seen 28 suicides so far this year, compared to 68 over all of 2018.

On another protest topic, the media rights group Reporters Without Borders and France's National Journalists Union protested Sunday on behalf of journalists who were detained and roughed up by police during Saturday's clashes.

The yellow vest movement, named after the high-visibility vests all French drivers must carry in their vehicles, started in November against a hike in fuel taxes.

It spread to become a broad movement against high taxes and Emmanuel Macron's pro-business policies, and protesters see themselves as standing up for the poor while Mr Macron is seen as representing the rich.

The movement has been marred by protest violence and the extremist views of some yellow vest demonstrators.
